FOREWORD

This is an unusual foreword for this is an unusual herd. It is the kind of herd that every breeder wishes he might have developed and seldom does. It represents the hopes and accomplishments of three lifetimes, Mr. C. Montagu Yates, his charming helpmate, and her father, Mr. Maxwell, who planted the first Jersey seeds at Maxwelton in 1912.

I have known many herds in many countries for many years but none quite like this for here are the results of four decades of careful record-keeping by two professional men whose professions are based upon accuracy and keenness of observation. Even more extraordinary in these high pressure days when only the exaggerated and sensational seems sought for, the aim has been to develop a herd of high type that produces profitably under practical farm conditions and with an inherited strength of constitution and freedom from disease.

That this three-fold ambition has been realized is apparent when the cattle and their records are seen.

It seems a pity that such a splendid program must end, but with two trunk line railroads and a four lane express highway bisecting the farm and housing developments hemming it in on both sides — no other conclusion was possible.

Canadian and American breeders who are fortunate enough to obtain some of these fine cattle will discover that their inherent merit is great and at the same time transmissible.

Maxwelton Basil Standard

Silver Medal — Superior Sire

We purchased Maxwelton Basil Standard as a baby calf, and the progeny he left us, after eight years of service at the head of the herd, have developed him into Superior ranks. He is now in service in the Waterloo Cattle Breeding Association in Ontario, where we hope that he will beget many more beautiful and useful daughters, such as he left in our herd.

He has thirty-one daughters and twenty-five granddaughters in the sale. His daughters are outstanding for their uniformly strong and well-shaped udders; their pronounced dairy temperament and depth of bodies.
